

When you fly for a living, and you meet new people, when they ask you what you do, and you tell them you're a pilot, you often get the same response. "I always wanted to learn to fly" is something you hear a lot. Apparently, there are a huge number of people that feel that way.

Maybe you're one of them.

Don't go your whole life with that empty hole in your life. It's never too late. If you're young enough, and you catch "the bug" you have the option of flying professionally, and you'll never find a better career. They say that if you have a job that you love, you'll never work a day in your life. Could you imagine looking forward to going to work? That's what it's like.

Whether you go on and jump in with both feet or you just get your Private Pilot's License, it's something you'll always have (they never expire), the fun you'll have will last a lifetime, and you'll be able to say the next time you run into somebody who flies professionally, that you fly, too.

You're going to spend a small fortune on cars you really don't need, and toys that you'll tire of and shove into the corner of the garage. Those things all come and go, and leave nothing behind. Your Pilot's License will give back to you as long as you live, give you a feeling of accomplishment, satisfaction, and validation that nobody can take away, and there's nothing really holding you back. Flying really does make everything more interesting, including you.
